ABSTRACT

Diagnostic methods are described for using the concentration of a cytokine and/or enzyme present in serum or other biological fluids in order to predict the predisposition of an individual to total joint replacement failure. Also described are diagnostic kits that are particularly suitable for use in such diagnosis.